I interviewed [REDACTED] this morning and informed him that there were no openings in the legal end of the Agency. [REDACTED] indicated that in any case, his law would need considerable refreshing and that he thought his qualifications were mainly in the exercise of his business experience. I said that while we also needed experience, at the present time I knew of nothing that fitted his particular background as the Director had severely restricted the size of the organization and that we were coping with openings by internal reorganizations. [REDACTED] said that he still felt that CIA was where he wanted to be and that he would hope to hear further. I said his file was still open and that if anything turned up he would be notified.
